

Broadcast ownership should be narrowed, not expanded as currently proposed. The consolidation of television, radio, and newspapers into a few powerful corporations will only limit the options we have and the type, range, and objectivity of information we receive. It is in citizens' interest to have as many different sources of information as possible because there are just as many different points of view.